

New Business Partner Announcement

Logics, LLC and Keystone Information Systems, Inc. Announce Relationship September, 2006

Keystone Information Systems and Logics, LLC announced an agreement between the companies to jointly market certain products from their respective software lines for local government administration.

Specifically, Keystone will draw upon Logics' strong product and experience in Utility Billing administration, and Logics will draw upon Keystone's Land and Tax software and expertise, to enhance the ability of each company to provide more comprehensive and integrated solutions for local government administration.

The companies have embarked on technical specifications for creating interfaces between these application products and the Financial administration application products that each offers, to provide clients with a more efficient integration across these areas. Keystone is positioning the Logics Utility product as the best upgrade path for users of Keystone's current version Utility Billing and Collections Software (including the versions acquired from EDS in 1998.)

Keystone Information Systems, of Maple Shade, New Jersey and founded in 1975, is a provider of comprehensive and integrated Financial, Human Resource and Land and Tax administration systems to local governments and public school districts across 10 states, with particular Tax administration emphasis in the states of Pennsylvania, Virginia and North Carolina .

Logics, LLC of Raleigh, North Carolina and founded in 1973, is a provider of comprehensive and integrated Utility Management and Financial Management systems to local governments and utility authorities in 7 states. Logics currently integrates its products with its sister companies, MSAG, a GIS mapping company and Inte-Great, a property management software company.
